

ECVPT diplomats have to

- keep abreast of new developments within the veterinary profession both within and outside the speciality;
- understand the limitations of his/her own speciality in the perspective of the veterinary profession;
- understand the possibilities for ECVPT specialists to interact with specialists in other areas and vice versa;
- be familiar with the potential for multidisciplinary cooperation;
- understand and practice evidence-based medicine.

In order to achieve these goals, and to establish the training programme, the ECVPT Executive Committee is guided by the following criteria:

- A registered specialist shall spend most of his/her working time working at specialist level in academia, public service or industry
- The training programme has been established in consideration of those of parent disciplines (veterinary science, pharmacology (International Union of Pharmacology, IUPHAR) and toxicology (International Union of Toxicology, IUTOX))
- The training programme should be of a similar breadth and quality to those developed elsewhere (e.g. USA, Australia), which allow inclusion of other training or experience, thus enabling mutual recognition of specialist registration in future
- A registered specialist should practice/work in an academic environment or a private company, in a laboratory, a hospital or a national or international institution with adequate facilities for the specialty
